There's No Door To Knock On In Heaven

Chris had been walking aimlessly for what seemed like hours. Everything around him was blurry. It was bright yet he couldn't see the sun. Despite the surrounding light, he felt cold.

A tap on his shoulder startled him. He turned around and his eyes grew wide.

"L... Layne?"

Layne's face was glowing.

"I heard. I'm so sorry, Chris."

"Where are we?"

"Not what you expected, huh?"

Layne's fingers grazed over the bruised skin of Chris' throat, his thumb rubbing gently over a purple mark on his neck.

"It'll go away," he said. "Now, come with me, I'll show you around."
